You probably don’t want to read this, but it’s a fact we simply cannot ignore. You see, as doctors, we aren’t immune to disease.

Even for the most seasoned practitioner, this can sometimes be a bitter pill to swallow. After all, we’ve spent many years educating ourselves about the human body, and how to prevent and cure diseases and ailments for our patients, and, of course for ourselves and our families.

However, this being said, no matter how proactive we are in our own health, sometimes even we get sick. We find out the devastating news that we have cancer, for example, or we possibly have had a stroke. For many reasons, diagnoses such as these are most certainly devastating, including the impact they can have on our dental practices.

“As a dentist myself, I can relate to any fears you may have about becoming ill and how this may impact your business,” says Dr. Bryan Brenner, Co-Founder of Dental Safety Net. “This is exactly the reason why we created Dental Safety Net. It’s the ultimate way to ensure your practice is left functioning in good hands while you receive the medical treatment you need.”

Dental Safety Net is a network of dentists and practitioners who are willing to go above and beyond for their fellow doctors. Created by dentists, for dentists, Dental Safety Net enables practitioners to take a medical leave for weeks, or even months at a time.

Now, while we certainly don’t like to talk about the ‘what if’s,’ it’s incredibly important for you, your family, and your patients to know your dental practice will continue to operate in the event you become ill.

Today – not tomorrow – is the time to become part of a growing network of trusted doctors who are willing, and able, to step in and take care of each other’s businesses when you need it most.
